

Biography

Zorica Maros graduated in study of philosophy and theology in Sarajevo (Bosnia and Herzegovina) and proceeded her post-graduate studies in Rome, at the Academia Alfonsiana (Italy). She completed a master degree at the Academy in 2007 and was enrolled in a program for doctoral studies. In 2010, she returned to Bosnia and Herzegovina and started working at the Catholic Theological Faculty in Sarajevo. She defended her doctoral dissertation at the Academia Alfonsiana in January 2013. The topic was “Dealing with violence in the ethnic conflict: Is it possible to speak of forgiveness as a moral obligation?”. Currently at graduate studies she teaches fundamental moral, virtue ethics, ethics of Cristian marriage, and bioethics. At the Master program she teaches on violence in ethnic conflicts and forgiveness. She is actively involved (in different programs) in peacebuilding in Bosnia and Herzegovina. From 2013 to 2017. she ruled, at Catholic Theological Faculty, the program: “From the war to reconciliation. The contribution of religious communities to healing and rebuilding of society.” Which included a public discussion and international conferences on the topics of violence, injustice and forgiveness, from interdisciplinary and multireligious point of view.
